Being a Doctor

By David Price

At school, I liked Science more than English or Maths and I passed the exam easily. Even before I started school I wanted to be a doctor so I decided to study medicine at Oxford University. For the first two years, I studied hard and went to classes. For the next three, I also helped doctors at the John Radcliffe Hospital four days a week. The days there seemed very long and sometimes the work was boring, but it was easy and I learnt more than in the classroom. My last year of studying was at Harvard medical school in the United States.

Now I live in London and work at a hospital in the South of the city. My working hours are Monday to Friday, 8am to 5:30pm, and every fourth day I have to work at the hospital all night and the next day too. I also work every fourth weekend and that's when I feel very tired!

I earn £20,000 a year- not much if you think about the hours! I'll earn more later, so I don't mind. Life in a big hospital can be difficult, but I love working with people and I feel happiest when I can help them.
